Having spent most of my life living in various parts of our shire, I have developed a deep appreciation for our communities and what they offer.

I have been a teacher, wife, mother and farm secretary for the past thirty years. I remain passionate about how educated and strong communities can shape the future, and I support a progressive but practical approach to community governance.

Over the years, I have been involved in a lot of sporting and community groups as a participant, coach or committee member, and I believe that supporting people to be actively involved in the community is essential for wellbeing.

Rural shires like ours and the businesses within them consistently face challenges when it comes to the provision of goods, services, events, facilities and infrastructure. I am proud to live in a place that is proactive in overcoming the hurdles that accompany rural living, and I would welcome the opportunity to contribute to this as a shire councillor.
